FOREWORD

IN THIS, THE 1919 BOBASHELA, WE ARE PRESENTING IN ADDITION TO THE REGULAR STUDENT LIFE A TOUCH OF THE LIFE WE LIVED WHILE IN THE U. S. ARMY. LIMITED TIME HAS PREVENTED US FROM GIVING AS FULL AN INTERPRETATION OF THE MILLSAPS' STUDENT LIFE AS WE WOULD WISH. OUR SINCERE DESIRE IS THAT THESE PAGES MAY SERVE TO KEEP BRIGHT IN YOUR MEMORY THE HAPPY AND PROFITABLE DAYS WE HAVE SPENT TOGETHER AS STUDENTS AND FRIENDS.

Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori.

TO THE MEMORY OF
DR. JOHN MARVIN BURTON
SCHOLAR, CHRISTIAN, GENTLE-
MAN AND PATRIOT

A MAN WHOM TO KNOW WAS
TO LOVE AND ADMIRE. IN MEMORY OF HIM, OF HIS PA-TRIOTIC SPIRIT, AND OF THE
SPIRIT OF THOSE BOYS OF
OUR STUDENT BODY WHO LIKE HIM HAVE MADE THE SUPREME SACRIFACE, WE
DEDICATE THIS, THE 1919
BOBASHELA

Dr. R. S. Ricketts

Dr. R. S. Ricketts had been a member of the faculty of Millsaps College since 1893, and doubtless is known and loved by more young men who have been students here than any other man who has ever been connected with the college. So long as the college shall last the spirit of this gentle, lovable, wise and just man will live in its walls and help to make up the spiritual influence that identifies Millsaps College.

God in his providence has withdrawn from us the wisdom, love, cheer, and counsel of his bodily presence with us week by week; we feel that in the loss of the earthly fellowship of Dr. Ricketts we and the school generations yet to be are deprived of a counsellor most wise, sympathetic and affectionate; of an interpreter of life most gentle, faithful, true and tolerant, who did not in harshness enforce the letter of the law, but with charity exemplified the very spirit of Christ.

We trust that the earthly fellowship thus interpreted may be continued in memories of his saintly life and may be renewed in some better future time.

Dr. J. M. Burton

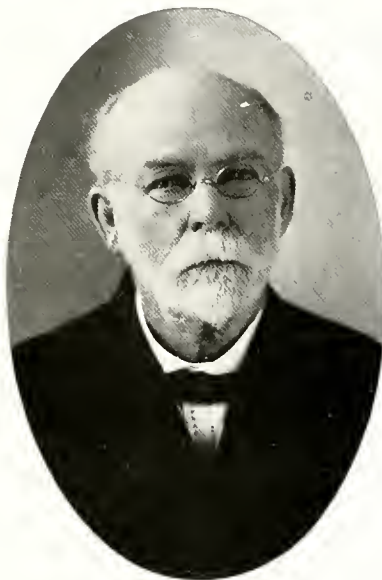

The tragedy of the war was brought home to Millsaps College very closely by the death in France of Dr. J. M. Burton, Professor of Romance Languages.

Professor Burton came to Millsaps in 1910. During the years spent here he not only stamped the impress of his strong personality upon many individual students who had come to admire and love him but also had given much of his life to form the traditions and ideals of the institution.

He was a man of character and principle. His life was consciously devoted to his work of interpreting French literature and civilization to America. His answer to the call of his country was in that same spirit of fidelity to duty that amounted to a consecration. If he died for France—he had lived and had planned to live for France and for the promotion of mutual understanding in the world's two great democracies.

His star shines golden in our great service flag. In unstinted measure Millsaps gave the best she had to the struggle for Liberty, and Fate took the best she gave. But what was finest in that life she shall keep forever—a fine tradition of service and of justice.

Judge Edward Mayes

In the death of Judge Edward Mayes during the Summer of 1917, the State of Mississippi lost its most eminent jurist, Millsaps College its oldest and most loved law teacher.

Judge Mayes took his first degree from the University of Mississippi in 1868; his Doctor of Laws from Mississippi College in 1882. He was professor of law at the University of Mississippi during the years 1877-92; Chancellor at the same place, 1889-92. He became Dean of the Millsaps Law School at its founding and served in this capacity until his death.

Judge Mayes' fame throughout the State was revered. He was especially known for his depth and breadth of intellect. At the time of his death no man in Mississippi was better versed in the profession for which he had so long been a leading exponent.

Now, he has departed from the place which he filled so long, but behind him he has left a memory that shall ever be an adornment to his name and to the State which he loved so long.

Judge Albert Hall Whitfield

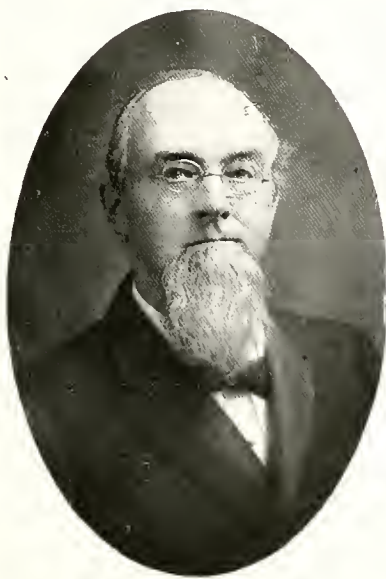

Judge Whitfield's death in the Fall of 1918 has left a vacancy in the Millsaps' Faculty which will be hard to fill. Of the type of old Southern gentlemen, he was versatile, friendly, kindly, learned.

He took his literary degrees from the University of Mississippi in 1871-73, and his law degrees from the same school in 1874 and 1895. At first he seemed to have had no desire to practice law, but studied it for breadth of culture. He served as Professor of Greek at the University from 1871 to 1874. He was Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Mississippi, which place he filled with dignity and wisdom.

The Millsaps students ever took an interest and delight in Judge Whitfield's teaching. He was humorous, practical, and withal well versed in laws.

His was a familiar and loved figure on the streets of Jackson. His wonderful faculties remained to him till the last. The tribute of respect paid to him by the Millsaps S. A. T. C. at his funeral amply displayed the love and respect with which the students had ever regarded him.

BOBACHELLA

What Would It Be?

And we sat us down and wondered
What on earth that we would see,
If together in one body
Such as this should chance to be.

Put the intelligence of Ducky
In a body long and thin,
Similar to that of Alex,
And give it Hammy's grin.

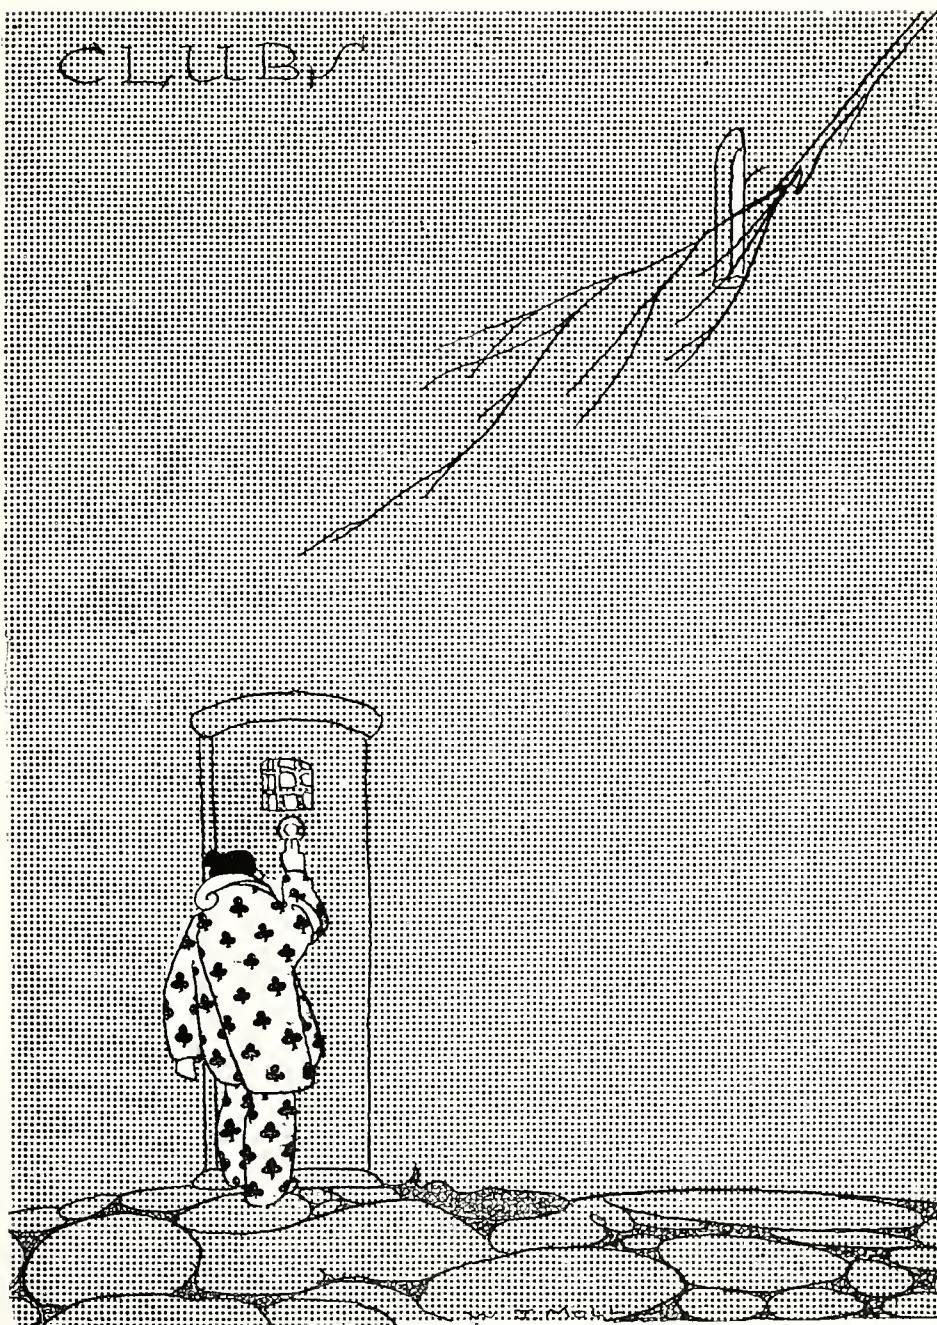

Still further, let's appropriate
The physiognomy of Prep.
And let it amble on its way
With Key's and Dippy's step.

Let it have the eyes of Halley
With their acrobatic stunts
And if its mustache should be Sully's
It would not be called a runt.

Now to preserve its unity
And that its head may not be bare,
Let's finish up our image
With Professor Harrell's hair.

Do you blame us if we wonder
What on earth that we would see
If together in one body
Such as this should chance to be?

WHO'S WHO

Memory is a treasured gift that man doth hold,
And now, since my locks are gray, not gold,
There arises in my breast, ever and anon,
A desire to visit the world of youthful fun.
It's the spell of the past, of days gone by;
My heart chords are touched, I breathe a sigh.

And whenc'er to the past my thoughts do tend,
I reach for the Bobashela, my faithful friend.
The one, of all, by whose presence I'm blest,
All others, before me, have gone to their rest.
I dry my eyes and tenderly open the old book;
I put on my glasses that I may get a clear look.

I gaze on faces that to me are most dear;
I knew them and loved them for a happy four year.
There was one we loved for his whole-hearted glee,
He was truly an optimist, dear old "Dick" McRee.
"There's no joy in life," Roberts used to say—
I don't know why, unless he was just built that way.

Well, there's "Pretty" Norton, filled with conceit,
But, well, Holloman and Graves were hard to beat.
Carl Howorth relieved us of our nickels and dimes.
"Dick" Sessions walked, just walked, no regard for time.
There is Bays Lamb, typical of the student race.
With him, "Irishman," silent and solemn of face.

Who was that who used to bank away at "Smiles"?
Oh! It was that care-free, musical Stiles.
I'd like to see old Charlie throw one more goal,
And Leonard, one of his learned (?) discourses hold,
Or even see Morse come, ambling up the hall,
'Twould bring a gladsome ray, 'twould help to lift the pall.

When it comes to writing gems of literature,
Frank Mitchell wore a laurel, I am sure.
Clara's fortune might have been her face,
But we loved her more for her womanly grace.
Don't you like a fellow who always does his share?
Well, that's John Vesey, the best all-round fellow there.

There wasn't a doubt in any one's mind
That "Snook" Sharbrough was the best of his kind.
He lied through habit, or was it a whim?
Really, I don't think it was nature in him!
Who is this? Oh! It's dear old Holloman again.
Fate made him the laziest of men!

Dear old book, you link me with the past.
I close your pages. Of my friends, you're the last.
Your memory is unfailing. You bring to my eyes
Pictures of other days, and happier days—O, how time flies!
For your value there can be found no measure.
Riches are mockery, you give real pleasure.

A Word About Society Brand Clothes

Society Brand style, like a triangle, has three dependent sides; the first is attractive patterns woven into fine fabrics; the second is the smart design of the model; the third is the tailoring of the clothes.

Each side is perfectly developed to meet the other two; that's why the effect is a finished whole—and the longer you wear a SOCIETY BRAND suit the better you'll know it.
